The Journal, we believe, has never found fault with Gov. Bigger's vetoes " in any case." After all, what is the operation of the Governor's veto under our constitution? Simply to ask the Legislature to one consider the bill, and if then a bare majority of the members elected in each house still vote for the bill, it becomes a law, notwithstanding the veto. No Governor who regards his standing with his constituents, will veto a bill, unless it violates the constituents, will veto a bill, unless it violates the constituents, which he is sworn to support, or unless it inflicts.
